

Divine and everyday antiques vessels

We are working over our Association's collection of everyday antiques vessels and not only, as you can see from the pictures.

We believe we are on the right tracks and it is only a question of time to make another step ahead improving this project "Divine vessels on the stairs to heaven".

Now we have 3 completed Kylix, and we are working over some new projects.

Playing Kottabos

<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Kottabos>

Kottabos (Ancient Greek: κότταβος) was a game of skill played at Ancient Greek and Etruscan symposia (drinking parties)

We tidied up the warehouse which is just a small part of our equipment belonging to our mobile kitchen re-enacting sets.

Each one of the vessels is tinned with pure tin and is absolutely safe to cook in it!

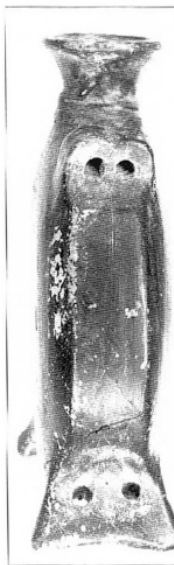

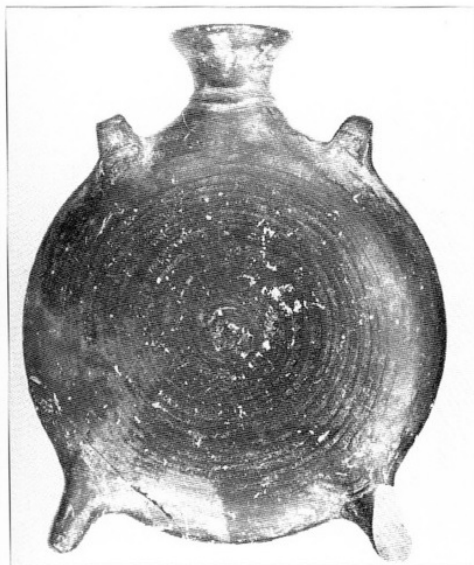

Our wine and water Amphora in use as part of ours Living History and Experimental Arheologic attempts on the Marathona's beach.

Our two hoplite water canteens are ready. Each Canteen contains about 600 g of water. This is just temporally vision of the water canteens, as we plan to put them in leather cases.

This hoplite's water canteen, found in Athens and probably dating to the 4th century BC, is surprisingly modern in appearance. It would have been covered with diagonal leather straps and lined round the edge. Note the holes through the lugs, which allow attachment to a shoulder sling. (Kiel Kunsthalle, Antikensammlung, inv. B61.1906)

Source of information Osprey book Warrior 027 Greek Hoplite 480 - 323 BC.